

Resources on Racism and Inequality Recommended by people from the Hill Cliffe Family

From Sara Lane (and others in the Bridge Small Group)

- There's a website called Be the Bridge (<https://bethebridge.com/>) which has a wealth of resources to make individuals more aware of racial brokenness and systemic injustice in the world.
- There's a book - that I imagine most people will have heard of by now - called "Why I'm No Longer Talking to White People About Race" discussing the frustration around how race and racism is discussed in Britain by those not affected by it: <https://www.waterstones.com/book/why-im-no-longer-talking-to-white-people-about-race/reni-eddo-lodge/9781408870587>
- And lastly, there's a really good video April and I have seen which provides a visual demonstration of privilege (not necessarily white privilege, but it's applicable). <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=4K5fbQ1-zps>

From Emily Murunga

"We Need To Talk About Race." By Pastor Ben Lindsay which is about the black experience in white majority churches, which is extremely thought provoking, and would highly recommend

From Lynda Battarbee

- Jen Hatmaker had Lisa Sharon Harper (who is amaazing!) on her podcast a couple of years ago and it was great-anyone wanting to find it should look for the title 'Unequally Saved: the Church's Role in Racism.' And 'Pantsuit Politics' did a really powerful podcast episode this week called 'Anguish'.
- And I noticed Christianity magazine has published some good articles, a bunch of which can be found here: <https://www.christianitytoday.com/ct/topics/r/racism/>
- And finally, the Independent created a list of racial justice charities in the UK needing support (although there are plenty in the US who really need our money too): <https://bit.ly/303yRTp>
